The young fellow came in, saying he was looking for his wayward sister. No such person in the house, and Lee Ying said, facetiously:

"Go looking for her in the mountains."

The young fellow seemed to feel indignation, and got ready to fight. The several Chinamen who were in the room asked him to go out, and one of his friends tried to restrain him. He was about to start, but the policeman without lifting a sword, Police-man Shureit, came and arrested the young man. He resisted and shot at Joseph F. Whitaker of Paterson, but several policemen took him when he was in the air. He was taken and was still standing up right with Chinamen. He was told:
